Air India Disinvestment

Why in news?

\n\n

The Union Cabinet in June, gave its in-principle approval for disinvestment of government equity in Air India.

\n\n

What is the rationale behind the disinvestment?

\n\n

\n

- Air India has been surviving on a Rs. 30,000-crore bailout package put together by the United Progressive Alliance government in 2012 to help its turnaround, and the debt relief provided by public sector banks.

\n

- Yet the airline has neither adequately improved its service nor become viable.

\n

- It continues to post heavy annual losses and has a massive outstanding debt of Rs 46,500 crore.

\n

- The government money that keeps Air India from going bankrupt would be much better used to fund social and infrastructure programmes.

\n

\n\n

What could be the potential problems?

\n\n

\n

- The airline, at present, has a massive debt load, and it is estimated that even the asset sale may not fully cover its present liabilities.

\n

- It is not yet clear whether the airline will be fully privatised or how its eventual sale will be executed.
\n
- A ministerial panel under Mr. Arun Jaitley is expected to begin working on the details soon.
\n
- Even though, the finance minister promised that the ministerial group would be set up quite fast, he refrained from stating a clear timeline for implementation.
\n
- Also, the idea of selling Air India's assets one at a time, by unbundling them to secure better valuation, could lead to delays.
\n

\n\n

What could be done?

\n\n

- \n
- The aim of the sale should be to get the best price for the airline.
\n
- One good way to achieve this would be to allow both domestic and foreign buyers to bid freely for stakes.
\n
- For this, the government will have to re-tune its FDI policy to allow foreign investors to buy a stake in Air India.
\n
- And, to achieve a relatively quick exit, the best option would be to transfer all unrelated assets such as subsidiaries and real estate to a special purpose vehicle (SPV) at zero value.
\n
- The name SPV is given to an entity which is formed for a single, well-defined and narrow purpose.
\n
- All debt, other than that related to aircraft, should be transferred to this SPV.
\n
- Thus, the airline, with a relatively clean balance sheet, would be available to be sold.
\n
- Later, the SPV could sell the assets one thing at a time, without a deadline to realise better value and repay its portion of the debt from the proceeds.
