Appointments of Public sector chiefs

Why in news?

\n\n

The petroleum ministry's proposal to appoint chairman and managing director of ONGC with just a year's validity is illogical.

\n\n

What is the recent appointment about?

\n\n

\n

- The Public Enterprises Selection Board (PESB) had shortlisted nine candidates for the top job, but Petroleum Ministry has chosen one of its own choice.
- Petroleum ministry also had sought the approval of the Appointments Committee of the Cabinet (ACC) for this appointment initially for a year.
- During which the ministry will conduct quarterly performance appraisal of the new recruit before seeking a fresh mandate for further employment.
- It is a classic example of all that is wrong with senior-level appointments in public sector companies.

\n\n

What are the issues with appointments?

\n\n

\n

- Various stakeholders -Appointments to top positions in PSUs are lengthy and complicated process,

\n

- It involves various organisations such as PESB requiring clearances from the administrative ministry, Central Vigilance Commission and finally the ACC.
\n
- Delayed appointments-These layers often delay the appointment.
\n
- There have been several instances of the appointment panel finalised by the PESB being scrapped without reason, delaying the process further.
\n
- Lack of foresight -There have been several cases where it initiated the selection process barely days before the current CMD was due to retire.
\n
- Political interventions - Large number of politicians affiliated with the ruling party are appointed as independent directors of various PSUs.
\n
- The question is how a politician with no experience in the core competence of the PSU concerned will add any value to the decision-making process.
\n

\n\n

What should be done?

\n\n

- There is a clamour for giving longer tenures to heads of public sector units so that they can make a meaningful contribution.
\n
- The decision of petroleum ministry beats logic of appointment of chiefs.
\n
- The government needs to institute a new process that incorporates the best practices for the selection of the leader of a public sector undertaking (PSU).
