\n\n

\n

- An open dialogue involving all three stakeholders will go a long way towards to enable the building preventive response mechanisms.

\n

- There is a need to develop a Uniform Child Protection Policy for all schools private or government, and even tribal ashrams in remote parts of the country.

\n

- The policy should emphasise on 'gatekeeping' to ensure that the recruitment of both teaching and non-teaching staff is done after thorough police verification and psycho-social assessment.

\n

- Also trained counsellors must be enrolled mandatorily in schools who can both prevent and detect abuse of children.

\n

- All teachers need to be sensitised about child abuse, taught to recognise it and made aware of laws such as the POCSO Act .

\n

- Awareness Sessions for children on safety and prevention of abuse also ought to become part of the curriculum.
