China makes Border Settlement

What is the news?

\n\n

A Chinese special representative, in a recent interview, said if India would compromise on this Arunachal Pradesh track, then Beijing would make similar compromises in the western sector.

\n\n

What is the Chinese stand?

\n\n

\n

- Referring specifically to Tawang, a town in Arunachal, the representative said Tawang is inalienable from China's Tibet in terms of cultural background and administrative jurisdiction.
- He asserted that China was not a signatory of the Simla Accord of June 3, 1914, which established the McMahon line in the eastern sector.
- China is of the view that even British respected China`s jurisdiction over Tawang and admitted that Tawang was part of China's Tibet.
- It believes that the Simla Accord, as well as the McMahon Line which it created, are not only unfair and illegitimate, but also illegal and invalid.

\n

\n\n

What is India's position?

\n\n

\n

- India said it was better to permanently close the boundary dialogue rather than Beijing raising the issue of Tawang.

\n

- India also said it would assume that China was not interested in settling the Line of Actual Control dispute if Tawang was ever brought to the table.

\n

- Given the importance of Tawang in the four Buddhist schools in Tibet, particularly the Gelug-pa school to which the 14th Dalai Lama belongs, India would never give it up to China.

\n

- Further it will have to go through a constitutional amendment requiring the nod of two-thirds of Parliament, which will be politically disastrous for the government that moves the proposal.

\n

\n\n

Why the Chinese stand is a concern?

\n\n

\n

- After 1962 war, Chinese withdrew behind the McMahon demarcation in the eastern sector but stuck to its positions in west.

\n

- So, further compromise would mean that the boundary would move from Kunlun to Karakoram watershed.

\n

- The Chinese interlocutors during the border talks conveyed that India would have to make concessions on both sides for a boundary settlement as by now the eastern sector had become important for Beijing.

\n

- The fact is that the Chinese position on boundary resolution has been shifting depending on Beijing's strategic ambitions.

\n

- Beijing is also aggressive in its demands, be it on the "One-China policy", the status of the Dalai Lama, the South China Sea, Masood Azhar's designation as terrorist or membership of the UNSC.

\n

- The recent interview further deepens Indian suspicion about China as the latter refuses to budge over any issue raised by India.
