\n

- Lashkar-e-Taiba (LeT), Jamaat-ud-Dawa (JuD) and Falah-i-Insaniyat Foundation (FIF) are placed under Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997.
- They have also attracted sanctions under the United Nations Security Council Resolution and have been dealt accordingly.
- To avoid grey-listing, Pakistan promulgated an Ordinance amending the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997, to include terrorist organisations listed by the UNSC.
- Consequently, JuD and FIF were declared as proscribed groups, and all their properties in Pakistan-occupied Kashmir and Gilgit-Baltistan were confiscated.

\n\n

\n

- Recently Islamabad High Court set aside the Election Commission's resolution refusing registration for JuD's political front, (MML).

- Pak's action against the JuD and FIF was aimed at evading grey listing by the FATF which had created a turmoil in the country.

\n

\n\n

\n

- Lashkar has long been considered a "good" terrorist group by the Pakistan army, which has used it as a proxy against India and Afghanistan.
- An influential section in the Army reportedly believes that Hafiz Saeed is too big taking him on directly will have unmanageable consequences.
- Thus Limited action against Saeed's groups is unlikely to satisfy the FATF.
