Listing of NHAI

Why in news?

\n\n

Union ministry of Road transport is planning for initial public offering or IPO of National Highways Authority of India (NHAI).

\n\n

What is an IPO?

\n\n

\n

- An initial public offering, or IPO, is the very first sale of stock issued by a company to the public.

\n

- Until a company's stock is offered for sale to the public, the public is unable to invest in it.

\n

- Prior to an IPO the NHAI has shareholders made up primarily of early investors i.e. government itself or its authorised firms.

\n

- By now any individual or institutional investor who wasn't involved in the early days of the NHAI's capital, can buy the shares.

\n

\n\n

What is the need for such proposal?

\n\n

\n

- Roadways ministry has long argued that there is "no shortage" of money but due to changing economic trends, it came up with the plan of IPO.

\n

- Due to bad debts and NPAs the government is not so confident in investing on infrastructure projects.

\n

- Banks are taking too long to approve the financial closure of highway projects, sometimes taking as much as an entire year.

\n

\n\n

What are the positive outcomes of this?

\n\n

\n

- Revenue escalation - This would open up an additional source of revenue, which the authority could use to finance projects under the engineering-procurement-construction (or EPC) financing structure.

\n

- Boosts accountability - Listing NHAI inevitably leads to pressures towards increasing transparency in its operation, and being accountable to the public.

\n

- Eliminates corruption-It has become increasingly clear that the NHAI could benefit from such transparency, and will lead to eliminating corruption.

\n

- Promotes Reputation - Due to series of allegations the roads sector does not have a healthy reputation overall, listing the NHAI would take an important step in that direction.

\n

- Performance upgrade - There is a huge gap between actual achievements of road building from the target of 40Kms/day, this IPO plan will resolve the issue.
