What is the significance of the Act?

It is the first domestic law to empower Indian authorities and courts to deal with piracy and pirate ships on the high seas.

- Maritime security- The Act ensures maritime security which is the key to safeguarding India's security and economic well-being.
- Navigation security- More than 90% of India's trade takes place by sea routes and over 80% of the country's hydrocarbon requirements was sea-borne, security of these routes and lanes of communication is critical.
- Increased authority- Earlier only allocated police station in Mumbai was handling piracy cases, now it empowers all coastal police authorities which has been a great enabler for the security forces particularly for Navy.
- Align with UNCLOS, 1982- It is an essential step for India to fulfill its international obligations under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS) and enhance its maritime security which has defined piracy and given a uniform international legal framework for combatting acts of piracy.

India ratified UNCLOS in 1995.
