What is the issue?

The retreat ceremony at the Attari-Wagah border today is more of a display of mutual hostility than peace.

What is the retreat ceremony?

\n\n

   \n
- Attari-Wagah is a recognized international border in Punjab that lies very close to Amritsar in India & Lahore in Pakistan.
   \n
- It is part of the 'Grant Trunk road' stretch that runs from Kolkata to Peshawar.
   \n
- The evening flags ceremony at the Wagah border is a daily military practice that the security forces of India and Pakistan have jointly followed since 1959.
   \n
- The practice began as a goodwill gesture to symbolise co-operating & co-ordination between the nations.
   \n
- Over the years, the display of respective nationalisms attained prominence and gestures have become far more aggressive, dramatic and hateful.
   \n
- Post 1999, after Kargil, both sides have constructed pavilions that facilitated accommodating a large audience.
   \n
- The spectators too usually join in the rhetoric through sloganeering and other modes of jingoistic patriotic display.

How has the commerce influenced patriotism?

\n\n

\n
- Over the years, business at border ceremony flourished flashing their tri-coloured advertisements and selling patriotic memorabilia.
  \n
- Frequent presence of celebrities and Bollywood music has added a completely new dimension to the craze.
  \n
- The telecast of the event in close angles has added fuel to more intense symbolism.

Why should we give up aggression?

\n\n

\n
- It's time to wind down the choreographed hostility at the India-Pakistan border as these posturing displays a deep ill will for the other.
  \n
- At present time, it looks less like a celebration and more about insulting the other.
  \n
- Although in 2010, both nations agreed to reduce aggressive gestures but things haven't changed on ground.
