

2. Inclusive entrepreneurship today, holds the promise of an exciting and uncharted future for social transformation in the country. Explain.

A need to study about Society:

Philosophers and Socialists.

generally study about Society by means of various manners, their consumption pattern, liking, their choice and usage. Society plays a major role in the consumption pattern and usage of individuals.

The Usage of the Study: When sociologists study

these pattern, business men and capitalists take these relevant data to further produce according to consumption demand and need, to fill the supply gap.

The traditional paradigm style: This traditional way of entrepreneurs and sociologists who has been in a tandem to creation of products and businesses in the society is what India also requires right now.

Inclusive entrepreneurship is well understood then.

explained. When western entrepreneurs study our Social pattern, they try to exploit our culture by means of reversing our tradition according to their production pattern.

But what we need is our indigenous entrepreneurs and manufacturers who understand our society better and help in production of products and innovation. can bring in much change by reducing the export-import gap. thus changing the fiscal-deficit gap of the nation and also can bring in social transformation.

Inclusion of dalits: Dalits who has been formerly marginalised in the society has a different view of the mainstream society and also vice-versa happens here.

So when marginalised people start entering into entrepreneurship it will help them understand human pattern and culture in a better way and will also give them a socio-economic status which helps them enter the main stream arena. Government has to start focusing on such literacy and knowledge to the deprived people and motivate them for the betterment.
