

Critically examine the feasibility of minimum government with maximum governance with respect to Nolan Scenario?

What is minimum government and maximum governance?

"Government has no business to be in business"

- Narendra Modi

It is the rhetoric of the present day government.
Current day scenario's
To do this government has brought many

Schemes and goals like biometrics for the government employees and (JAM) Jan Dhan Ahar mobile for direct benefit transfer to the people so that it reduces the government

But this process shows that government don't have any trust in the bureaucratic structure of the country. As we all know that bureaucracy is the main reason for the ^{max} government's ~~complex~~

It then governance

So the government can enhance governance by only empowering them to take decisions easily and making them real time problem solvers than rule followers.

But on contrary to this the present day government is making the employees rule followers as most of the decisions are taken in the Prime Minister's office (PMO) itself. So the merely wait for the instructions to follow The government's decision of demarcation is questionable in this context.

But at times maximum governance has been mistaken by the government. Because it tend to think that maximum government means maximum approval of projects. As India is moving towards age of doing business ministry of environment has started approving projects at a faster rate

But this has backfired because it has affected the environment and people a lot they "maximum governance is end of the government to improve the life of the people works. and more government is where the government is unable to unwilling toward people

Conclusion - Swachh Bharath Campaign may not become more successful because of the lack of promotion from bureaucrats. Thus government ^{rather than the} fight against ~~becoming~~ ^{becoming} stricter to enhance governance. It should loosen its hold and encourage bureaucrats to take proactive decisions.
